

Passage 1
Answer questions 1-25 from passage 1 and answer questions 26 - 50 from passage 2

1 On a cold spring afternoon, while walking home from school, I detoured through the playground at the end of the alley. I saw a group of old men, two seated across a folding table playing a game of chess, others smoking pipes, eating peanuts, and watching. I ran home and grabbed Vincent's chess set, which was bound in a cardboard box with rubber bands. I also casually selected two pretzel rolls of life savers. I came back to the park and approached a man who was observing the game.

2 "Want to play?" I asked him. His face widened with surprise and he grinned as he looked at the box under my arm.

3 "Little sister, been a long time since I play with dolls," he said, smiling benevolently. I quickly put the box down next to him on the bench and displayed my retort.

4 Lau Po, as he allowed me to call him, turned out to be a much better player than my brothers. I lost many games and many life savers. But over the weeks, with each diminishing role of candies, I added new secrets. Lau Po gave me the names. The humble servant who kills the king and more.

5 There were also the fine points of chess etiquette. Keep captured men in neat rows, as well-tended prisoners. Never announce "Check" with vanity, lest someone with an unseen sword slit your throat. By the end of the summer, Lau Po had taught me all he knew, and I had become a better chess player.

6 A small weekend crowd of Chinese people and tourists would gather as I played and defeated my opponents one by one. My mother would join crowds during these outdoors exhibition games. She sat proudly on that bench, telling my admirers with proper Chinese humility, "is luck."

7 A man who watched me play in the park suggested that my mother allow me to play in local chess tournaments. My mother smiled graciously, an answer that meant nothing. I desperately wanted to go, but I bit back my tongue. I know she would not let me play among strangers. So as we walked home I said in a small voice that I didn't want to play in the local tournament. They would have American rules. If I lost, I would bring shame on my family.

8 During my first tournament, my mother sat with me in the front row as I waited for my turn. I frequently bounced my legs to unstick them from the cold metal seat of the folding chair. When my name was called, I leapt up. My mother unwrapped something in her lap. It was her change, a small tablet of red jade which held the sun's fire. "is luck," she whispered, and tucked it into my dress pocket. I turned to my opponent, a fifteen-year-old boy from Oakland.

9 As I began to play, the boy disappeared, the color ran out of the room, and I saw only my white pieces and his black ones waiting on the other side. "Blow from the South," it murmured. "The wind leaves no trail." I saw a clear path, the traps to avoid. The wind blew stronger. "Throw sand from the East to distract him. "Check," I said.
